young man who was drowned last Friday near Westport in the Driscoll slough, has been recovered. It was feared that the strong current prevailing at the time would tend to draw the body into the river and that its recovery would be impossible, but the searchers persevered in their efforts nevertheless. Coroner Pohl has not yet decided on an inquest and will investigate the case before he renders his decision. He is in Westport now for AttemptedSailor Runners Failed in Their Efforts to Force Charles Gardner to Go to Sea.

Charles Gardner is from Missouri.
He wanted to know how it seemed to be aboard a ship, and P. J. Lynch, being a man of few words, arranged the matter for him. Now Mr. Lynch is trying to explain to the satisfaction of the law that it was not the intention to cause the young man—who wanted to know to remain permanently on board the ship but that it was merely intended that Mr. Gardner, late of Missouri, should act as a substitute for a seaman who would later be shipped.
This explanation is obviously not satisfactory—at least not to those who have an opinion to express.

Rev. J. W. McCormack went aboard the British ship Foyledale Sunday morning at 9 o'clock to hold services with the seamen. Mr. McCormack has been the seamen's chaplain in this port for many years and there is no one who knows their wants better than he or who to a greater degree sympathizes with their hard condition. When possible the service is held in the forecastle, the chaplain preferring this arrangement to any other as he finds it easier to approach the men in their own quarters and it is always his desire to cause everything to be as comfortable as possible for his hearers.

On Sunday morning the service was held in the fore-castle as usual and Mr.
McCormack noticed during its progress that one member of his little congregation sat aside from the others and wept quietly to himself. A seasoned tar does not, as a rule, waste his time in shedding tears and this, together with the fact of the young fellow's appearance, convinced the chaplain that the man who attracted his attention was a novice when it came to matters of the sea. So, when the service was over, he stepped up to the young fellow, and kindly inquired into his condition. The young man seemed greatly pleased that anyone should take an interest in him and it required very little questioning to get his story.

Charles Gardner is from Missouri, as already noted, and he has been for a short time employed in a Deep river logging camp. Before that he had seen service as a farm hand in another part of the state. Becoming tired of the hard life of the camp, Gardner quit his job and last Friday came over to this city, registering at the Occident.
He seemed to be well supplied with funds, was orderly and intelligent and the hotel appreciated him as a guest.

Saturday morning while walking on Bond street, Mr. Gardner met a stranger who entered into conversation with him and evinced generally a marked interest in his welfare.
Was Mr. Gardner working? No.
Mr. Gardner was not working. Had he ever been to sea? No, he had never been to sea. Would he like to go to sea? No, he was sure he would

A telegram was received yesterday by Richard Leathers announcing the death of his brother, Joseph Leathers, which occurred at Bremerton, Wash.
Mr. Leathers had formerly resided here where he was associated with his brother in the boat building business.
From here he went to Alaska, being among the first to visit the Klondike when the gold excitement created such a furor. From there he went to Bremerton and had employment in the navy yard there. Richard Leathers left for Bremerton last night to take charge of the body.

J. J. Walter came up from a week's stay at Elk creek yesterday. He characterizes the Seaside-Elk creek road, which the county court is now taking steps to improve, as the most abominable public highway he ever traveled. It is almost impassable even for horses, from mud and fallen trees and washed-out bridges. As stone and gravel are abundant it can be readily made a good road. Mr.
Walter has become interested in timber having associated himself with John Lamont, formerly of the Illinois Cen-not. Well, then, would Mr. Gardner like to go aboard a ship, just to say a short visit, as it were? Mr. Gardner is from Skidmore, Missouri, and, it happens, he had never seen a ship until he reached this port, so he thought e would like to pay one a brief visit.

The stranger was Patrick J. Lynch, the famous benefactor of seamenkind, and he immediately began to arrange for the "visit."

He took young Gardner aboard the Foyledale with some seamen he was shipping and when the young man would have returned with the small boat some excuse was formulated for leaving him behind, and so he did not come ashore, though he protested against such treatment.
Mr. McCormack was greatly wrought up over the matter and at once began an investigation. The story as he heard it was confirmed by the sailors as far as they were acquainted with it, and all expressed open sympathy for the young man. The minister came ashore then and at once notified Sheriff Llavlille. He secured a launch and brought Gardner ashore and in the afternoon placed Lynch under arrest. It developed that one Theodore Tobias had associated himself in the alleged shanghai case and who, it has developed, signed the articles in Gardner's name. So Tobias was also arrested and is now in jail. But Lynch, the investigator and promoter of the criminal plot, was released upon his own recognition.

Yesterday, in his preliminary hearing, his testimony was to the effect that Gardner was to be removed from the ship before the vessel finally sailed, that in the meantime he would merely act as a substitute for the regular saman. The attempt was made to show that Gardner had signed the articles but Acting British Vice-Consul Harry Cherry positively identified Tobias as the man who had done it. Mr. Lynch appeared in his own behalf and showed considerable acumen in meeting all questions. No decision was reached yesterday. Justice Goodman taking the case under advisement.

The case of Theodore Tobias will be brought up later. Little is known of him, except that he has been a habitue of the sailor boarding house. He states that on a previous occasion Lynch had requested him to sign articles for another man, but he had refused to do so. He protests his innocence in the present case, but when requested to sign Gardner's name in court declined, which is considered incriminating evidence.

Sheriff Linville is acquainted in Skidmore the town from which young Gardner hails, and knows personally men for whom he has worked. The young man's associations there are of such a nature that the sheriff cannot but believe that his present story is a correct one.

trial railway in handling timber lands.

body of 19 townships which has lately been surveyed east of the mountains.
The circuit court convened yesterday morning and immediately the case of Charlotte Grimberg, administratrix, vs the Columbia River Packers' association was taken up. The evidence was all summed up by noon and the case was submitted to the jury. The jury, after being in session the entire afternoon, failed to agree, standing 10 for the plaintiff and two, Clark Loughery and Lem E. Howe, for the defendant.
Earlier in the afternoon three of the jurors stood in favor of the defendant, but one was won over by the majority.
It was impossible, however, to shake either of the others, so the jury was unable to render a verdict. The court convened in the evening and the jury was discharged. It will now be necessary to try the case over again, which will be done at the next term of court.

GIRL TAKEN FROM DANCEHALL

A message was received yesterday by Chief of Police Hallock from the superintendent of the Girls' and Boys' Aid society of Portland announcing that an inmate of the home, Theresa Kessler, had secretly taken her departure from there and it was thought she was in Astoria. The wire further stated an agent would arrive here last night. The chief immediately investigated the matter and found the young girl living on Astor street in one of the dance halls. He took possession of her at once and last night met Officer Hawley on his arrival from Portland. The girl was identified and will be taken back to Portland this morning.
